

What makes you question one person on the street rather than another?

It really depends on the type of area, such as a high crime area or if a crime has just occurred and if the person fits the description of the subject who is being looked for. The person may have been jaywalking or they may be a juvenile who is wearing a backpack who should be in school, but is instead out walking around during school hours. School is out, either for the summer or during a break and a juvenile is walking the area wearing a backpack. It could be that the officer knows that the person they are stopping is a known gang member and is simply having them fill out a field interview card for the gang file. The reasons are numerous but all relate back to having probable cause or a reason associated as to why they are being stopped.
